Turkey's Economy to Recover in 2013

Turkey's economy is expected to grow 4% this year, in line with government forecasts, due to stronger domestic demand and probably underpinned by monetary easing by June, a Reuters poll showed. Turkey's economy was the fastest growing in Europe in 2011, expanding 8%, but it grew only 2.2% last year as domestic demand slumped. The median forecast in a poll of 25 economists suggests acceleration to 4.5% next year. Growth will accelerate to 5.4% in the fourth quarter of this year before easing back.

Report Forecasts Investment Flow to Turkish Insurance Sector

According to the "Global Insurance Outlook 2013" report recently released by Ernst & Young, Asian and European investors will focus on Turkey's insurance sector in 2013, particularly as a result of government incentives offered in private pension plans (BES). The report said, "Turkey's young population and increasing qualified manpower potential in addition to the new regulations implemented regarding the insurance sector will direct the interest of Asian and European investors to Turkey as consumption has slowed down in those countries." Commenting on Turkey's insurance sector, the report also underlined that this sector will follow the success of other sectors in the country and become a leader and a determinant in its region.
